The ^M character is a Carriage Return. It is typical of DOS/Windows systems to use a Carriage Return/LineFeed (CRLF = ^M^J) combination as the result of pressing the Enter key. Unix uses only the LineFeed. I would have expected the FTP client and server to handle this quietly, unless there is a setting peculiar to your setup that is causing you grief.

Yes exactly, I dont see the ^M character on other hosts where my ftp works fine.

I really don't know whether this might lead us to the solution, but I have done a comparison bet'n these hosts and found that this is only difference.. Anyway pl find the messages

Re: ftp problem-Login incorrect

AIX-L: Re: ftp problem-Login incorrect

The abnormality I have observed is that I see a ^M character after each and every command. This happend when I try to connect from Windows mahcine or even Unix machine also.

Any thoughts on this..

TIA

Turn on ftp debug in hopes of receiving more info

Inetd.conf

ftp stream tcp6 nowait root /usr/sbin/ftpd ftpd -l

syslog.conf

daemon.info /var/adm/ftpllog

refresh both src's.

Can you scp?

Yes I keep using it for telnet and I have just reset the password also..

I suspect it is something to do with some file permission....can you throw some light

Have you tried using telnet as the user? I have seen people using ftp and it failing when the password has expired...
