Joseph,

Great !!! Thanks for the information. But how come you have such a vast knowledge of all such things which are not usual. Anyway thank you very much.

So as you said the third party who is managing the servers would have created the whole software kit and deployed on the server.

Cheers
Praveen

Praveen,

The short answer is if the 3rd party product isn't designed to be installed by 'installp,' then the product won't be registered in the appropriate ODM files, so upon execution of 'lspp,' you won't see the software in its output.

For the system in which you've seen a managed services company's name as the fileset name, I would guess that they packaged their product pursuant to the instructions given in Chapter 20 entitled "Packing Software for Installation" in the "General Programming Concepts: Writing and Debugging Programs" book.

I hope this helps.

Hi,

If I have a third party software which is not specifically designed for AIX (What I mean by saying this is, the file format of the installation files is not in bff format.), and I want to install and wish to see this file set name in lspp output, how do I achieve this.

B'coz one of the system I have seen had a fileset that is customised for that server. The lspp output on the server,had the managed services company's name as the fileset name.

TIA
Praveen
