I do not think Gmail, or Yahoo is the issue.

Your local IP may be black listed.. I had the issue with one of my client.

Find out your local IP, and check spam blasklists to see if your IP is listed

Hi list.

Whenever I try to post I get something like this:

Your mail to 'freebsd-questions' with the subject

[panic]page fault while in kernel mode

Is being held until the list moderator can review it for approval.

The reason it is being held:

SpamAssassin identified this message as possible spam

Although I'm subscribed user of mailing lists.

What should I do?

Hi ytriffy,

Re: Cannot post because of spamassassin blocking my mail

You're posting from gmail.com. That's a known public email domain, that is. I would guess you'd get the same problem coming from yahoo.com or hotmail.com. Do you have a friend running their own email server, so you could get a private email address? Or does your ISP not supply you with a private email address?

I don't know for sure, but I think SpamAssassin would label any publically accessible email server as "possible spam source". That's what I'd do, for sure.
