Subject: RE: [HPADM] Information

The V2600 is a very different architecture from all other HP 9000 computers as it was developed by the Convex company which HP acquired several years ago.

The console is actually a 700-series workstation but there are plenty of docs on docs.hp.com concerning the V-class console (none of which will be needed if the console is working OK). It runs HP-UX 11 and higher and is a 64bit system like all HP 9000's produced in the last 2 years.

So unless you are going to try to repair it yourself (definitely not recommended), the only classes you need would be HP-UX sysadmin and related tasks like shell scripting.
