

comp.unix.bsd.freebsd.misc: Re: One computer, two screens, keyboards and mouses?

Re: One computer, two screens, keyboards and mouses?

Source: <http://unix.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/comp.unix.bsd.freebsd.misc/2004-10/0322.html>

From: Jimi Hullegård (ask-for-real-email_at_nothotmail.com)

Date: 10/09/04

Date: Sat, 9 Oct 2004 19:09:58 +0200

Gregory Toomey wrote:

> Jimi Hullegrd wrote:

>

>> Hi

>>

>> I want a system (ie computer) that can handle two simultaneous >> users, each with their own set of screen, keyboard and mouse.

>>

>> Since I use Windows now, I wanted to continue using windows. And I >> found a company that can make that possible:

>> <http://www.aldenassociates.net/>

>>

>> But then I have gotten suggestions about FreeBSD, and that it can do >> this without special hardware. Apperantly it's called multiuser.

>> Is that correct? Can I have a true multiuser system with FreeBSD and >> only one computer? If so, what is needed?

>> And since I never ever has tried FreeBSD, how difficult is it to get >> the system up and running for a total newbie like me?

>> I looked at www.freebsd.org and found nothing of real value when >> searching for multiuser.

>

> Its a gimmick that Jetway is promoting with a particular motherboard.

ah... Is it these 2-User TWIN series?

<http://www.jetway.com.tw/evismn/product/twin/index.htm>

Thanks for pointing me in that direction, even though you don't seem to believe in this. (I can't see why not)

> Just use two PCs and forget about this fluff.

Then I'd rather try the Alden Duet system (se link above).

Why do you think this is fluff? I think it's a really good idea.

/Jimi

Re: One computer, two screens, keyboards and mouses?